A CITY UNDER ONE ROOF.

The Largest House of Which the World Can Boast.

Every American, European and Oriental country has its scores of public and private mansions, yet Vienna, Austria, has the giant of them all. The Friehaus (the free house), situated in Wieden, a suburb of the city just mentioned, is the most spacious building on the globe. Within its walls a whole city of human beings live and work, sleep and eat. It contains, in all, between 1,200 and 1,500 rooms, divided into upward of 400 dwelling apartments of from four to six rooms each. This immense house has thirteen courtyards—five open and and eight covered—and a large garden within its walls. A visitor to the building relates that he spent two hours looking for a man known to reside in the house.

Scarcely a trade, handiwork or profession can be named which is not represented in this enormous building. Gold and silver workers, makers of fancy articles, lodging-house keepers, bookbinders, agents, turners, hatters, officers, locksmiths, joiners, tutors, scientific men, government clerks, three bakers, eighteen tailors, twenty-nine shoemakers, and many other tradesmen live in it.

The house has thirty-one staircases, and fronts on three streets and one square. In one day the postman's delivery has amounted to 1,000 pieces to this single but titanic house. To address a letter to the house and to the person it is intended for does not assure the sender that the person to whom it is addressed will ever receive it.

In order "to make assurance doubly sure," all letters addressed to the "Friehaus," must be provided with both the given and the surname of the person for whom intended, the number of the court, the number of the staircase, and the number of the apartment; otherwise it is apt to go astray, as though addressed to a city unprovided with directions as to street and number.

At the present time 2,112 persons live in this immense building, and pay an annual rental of over 100,000.

Tea Drinking.

The custom of tea drinking is as old as the Chinese Empire, and as early as 780 A. D. a duty was levied on the tea that grew wild on the Chinese mountains. But it is within two centuries that its use was adopted by the English, when the East India Tea Co. imported it and it was sold at $25 a pound. Its use was confined to the royal household. In the reign of Henry VII. a refreshment consisting of tea and cakes was called a voide. On the occasion of the marriage dinner of Katharine of Arragon and Arthur, Prince of Wales, the court chronicler wrote: "The evening refreshment called voide was brought in by four-score earls, barons and knights, walking two and two. Ipocras and comfits were offered. One noble servitor presented the golden spice plate, a second the cups, while a third of lower rank filled the cups from a golden ewer."

Since then what Washington Irving calls the "motherly teapot" has become a power in the world. People have learned how to make tea as well as to drink it. In its first stage one Englishman had it served up as greens, the water in which it was boiled thrown away.

There never has been discovered a good substitute for tea. During the war of the revolution our forefathers adopted a "liberty tea," which was made from a four-leaved plant called "loose strife." This plant was pulled up like flax; its stalks, stripped of their leaves, were boiled; the leaves were then put into an iron kettle, and the liquor of the stalks poured over them. After this process the leaves were laid upon platters and dried in a brick oven heated for the purpose.

Tea, flavored with vanilla and rum, is a popular drink in Germany. The rum prevents the tea drinker from lying awake at night.

Now that some calculating soul has discovered that 400 cups of tea can be made from a pound, we may expect a very mild decoction of the "cups that cheer but not inebriate," as the Poet Cowper sang.

An Artificial Florida.

A well-known physician of New York has originated a scheme which provides for the erection within the city limits of an establishment where persons suffering from weak or diseased lungs can pass the inclement season in a mild, healthful climate, kept at an equitable temperature throughout the entire winter. This proposed sanitary establishment will practically be a village of 500 inhabitants enjoying continuous summer, with ample accommodations for necessary exercise, and provided with the ordinary means of amusement and recreation. The plans of the establishment, which is to be known as the "Sanitary Winter Home and Air Palace," call for the erection of a brick building 200 feet square, inclosing an open paved courtyard 100 feet square. This main structure will be 50 feet in height, divided into four stories. On top of it will be an air garden 35 feet wide, laid out in grass plots and walks and adorned with trees, shrubbery and flowers. Outside of this garden, and as a continuation of the main building, will be two additional stories, 15 feet in width, the upper one of which will be an inclosed promenade for the patients.

The capitalists interested in the scheme want at the same time to effect a cure of their ailments. This they expect to do by evaporating into the atmosphere within the building medicaments generally conducive to health, so that the patients will breathe the medicated air.

Few Chinese Women Leave China

Tens of thousands of Chinamen leave China every year and settle in other countries, especially South America, the Islands of the Pacific, and the West Indies, but it is a rare thing for Chinese women to leave the land of their birth. There are probably less than 100 of them in the United States, and there are hardly any in Brazil or the Sandwich Islands. It appears by the Cuban census which has just been taken that there are now nearly 50,000 Chinese men in Cuba and only 84 Chinese women. The customs of the Chinese people are adverse to female emigration, which, moreover, is under official restriction. Few of the Chinamen who go abroad are married; nearly all of them are quite young. They leave China in the hope that they will make money and return there to get married.

The Seven Years' War closed with the treaty signed at Hubertsburg, Saxony, by the Empress of Austria, the King of Prussia and the Elector of Bavaria, Feb. 15, 1763. By this treaty Prussia secured Silesia.
