CURRENT COMMENT.

The World's Fair abroad. The Fair will be worthy of the whole American people.

Our American consuls are nowhere unless they do things on a magnificent scale. —Manawatapu, India Herald.

The World's Columbian Exposition promises to be the greatest and most important of the world's history.

The World's Columbian Exposition will offer to the foreign visitor a collection of marvels without precedent.

The participation of America, England, France and Germany practically guarantees the success of the Exposition.

The preparations for a proper representation of Germany at the World's Exposition cannot be begun too early.

No other city in the republic possesses such possibilities of carrying out to a successful end so enormous an enterprise as Chicago.

The exhibition will provide a mart wherein he who has anything destined for the use of man can show it to the world.

The elaborate preparations which are being made for the World's Fair, to be held at Chicago in 1893, give promise that this Exposition being equal to any which the world has yet seen.

Which government remains faithful to its declared intention of not officially participating in any world's exposition, yet it announces its intention, so far as may be possible, of assisting exhibitors.

The fall of Balmaceda puts an end to the Chilean insurrection, but this only gives the Chilean government a chance that they have outgrown Government by pronouncement tempered by assassination.
