Always open—the offer made by the proprietors of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. It's a reward of $500 cash for an incurable case of catarrh, no matter how bad, or of how long standing. They'll carry it out, too. It's one thing to make the offer. It's a very different thing to make it good. It couldn't be done, except with an extraordinary medicine. But that's what they have. By it's mild, soothing, cleansing and healing properties, Dr. Sage's Remedy cures the worst cases. It doesn't simply palliate for a time, or drive the disease to the lungs. It produces a perfect and permanent cure. Try it and see.

If you can't be cured, you'll be paid.

The only question is—are you willing to make the test, if the makers are willing to take the risk?

If so, the rest is easy. You pay your druggist fifty cents and the trial begins.

If you're wanting the $500 you'll get something better—a cure!

DIED ON HER GRAVE.

GEN. BOULANGER TAKES HIS OWN LIFE.

The Notorious French Impostor Ends His Stormy Career Beside the Grave of His Late Mistress—He Had Reached the End of His Financial Tether.

He Was Once Great.

The "brav' General," Georges Ernest Jean Marie Boulanger, ex-Minister of War of France, shot himself through the head at Bru sels while standing by the grave of Mme. Bonnemain, the woman who had been known as his mistress since the stirring days of 1888. He fell forward on the grave, and was found by an attendant, who rushed instantly to the spot, quite dead. The ball had been fired into the suicide's left ear, and the revolver was still clinched in his right hand.

Mme. Bonnemain was the m'stress of the house in the Rue de Berri, Paris, whither Boulanger resorted so frequeatly when he was at the top of his power. Though the place was constantly watched by spies it was from this house that Boulanger fled to England and with him went Mme. Bonnemain. She was his constant companion in London, in Brussels and in Jersey, following his broken fortunes with the same fatuous devotion which she paid to him in the days of his apparent prosperity. Her fortune of 1,500,000 francs was freely his

Mme. Bonnemain died July 17 last of consumption, and since then Boulanger has been in a state of unbroken melancholy. He frequently visited her grave, over which he caused to be erected an elaborate tomb. On the morning of his death the General went as usual to the grave, accompanied at a respectful distance by one of the attendants still attached to his person. The attendant from his retreat heard the General giving way as usual to lamentations, but suddenly these were interrupted by the report of a revolver, and when he rushed forward he discovered his master's body bathed in blood.

The suicide was evidently premeditated upon a truly theatrical scale. The dead man was in full military dress, and on his heart were pinned all the medals he had received from France for bravery in the field. There was a letter also, but this was seized by the authorities, who declared it was of too serious political import to be made public except with the permission of the French Republic.

Brussels is in a state of excitement, and dispatches received from that city indicate that the same feeling prevails in Paris as well. In the absence of any interference (which is most unlikely), Boulanger will be buried where he fell—by the side of the woman who devoted her life and her fortunes to him.

Since the third Napoleon took possession of Paris upon that December night in 1851 no such attempt has been made, even in the South American republics, to establish the rule of the adventurer as that which was put forth by Boulanger in 1888.

His efforts to overthrow the French republic by means of a coalition of the Orleanist pretenders and the army seemed at one time upon the very threshold of success. By marvelous intrigues with all parties except the representatives of Napoleon he managed to obtain money and influence enough to establish himself not only with the Paris rabble but with the clericals and peasants throughout the provinces. At the elections of 1888 he seemed to be fully justified in issuing the famous manifesto in which he declared that France could now "congratulate herself upon having reached the hour of her deliverance." And indeed there were hosts of intelligent people throughout the world who had come to believe that parliamentary government was impossible for France.

Boulanger was born at Rennes in 1837. His descent on the maternal side is Welsh. In 1855 he entered the military college of St. Cyr and was made sub-lieutenant in 1857. He served under Marshal Raulon in the Kabyle campaign. He also took part in the Franco-Italian war, and was wounded at the battle of Turbigo. In 1860 he obtained his full lieutenancy and two years later was promoted to a captaincy, having in the interim seen service in Cochin China. Just before the war of 1870 he became major. He was with Bazaine at Metz, but by some means escaped the fate of Marshal Bazaine's army, and made his way back to Paris. He was then promoted to a lieutenant colonelcy by the government of national defense and fought at Champigny (Nov. 30 to Dec 2). After the suppression of the commune Boulanger's newly attained promotion was quashed by the grade revision committee, but was restored to him in 1874. In 1880 he became brigadier general. Being appointed to the command of the army of occupation of Tunis, Gen. Boulanger had a disagreement with M. Camleon, the resident general, and was recalled. He then held the War Office appointment of director of the infantry division and became Minister of War in 1886.

When M. de Freycinet resigned and was succeeded by M. Goblet (December, 1886,) Boulanger retained his portfolio; but on the fall of M. Goblet his name did not appear in the cabinet of M. Rouvier. Soon after this the General was dispatched to Clermont-Ferrend to take command of an army corps, receiving a great ovation at Paris on his departure. When the Limousin scandal broke upon Paris like a thunder clap General Boulanger commented very freely upon the war minister's conduct, and was immediately ordered under close arrest for thirty days at his own headquarters.

HUNDREDS SHOT DOWN.

BLOODY REVOLT IN GUATEMALA'S CAPITAL.

The People Rise Up Against President Barillas on the National Holiday—Soldiers Routed by the Mob—How Chandler, an Oklahoma City, Was Born.

After Barillas' Blood.

Reports have been received of a revolution in Guatemala in which 500 lives have been sacrificed. It appears that the people were celebrating the anniversary of their national holiday, and President Barillas had personally appointed the orators of the day. To this the masses took exception. When the orators took the rostrum it was a signal for a storm of stones, which set them to flight, they being chased across the big plaza by a howling mob. An exciting scene followed, and every Barillas partisan was driven from the plaza. The news of the riot spread rapidly, and soon Barillas threw a battalion of infantry into the large square for the purpose of dispersing the mob. They, with fixed bayonets, attempted to carry the plaza by assault. They were met with a shower of stones and by a fusillade from revolvers, and fled, leaving many dead and wounded behind. Members of the mob shouted: "Let's storm the national palace, kill Barillas and restore a republican form of government." "Plundering the national treasury must cease." Barillas then ordered artillery into the plaza and infantry and two cannon to guard his residence. When the guns were turned on the mob the rioters fled, keeping up a desultory fire on the soldiers. They left the plaza, but fought in the side streets; in fact they practically during the night held full control of the city.

It is thought this will cause a general revolt throughout the entire Republic of Guatemala, and engender war in all of the other Central American States. A strict censorship is maintained over all press dispatches, and the mails are also trifled with to prevent any information becoming known. A special from Newton, on the line between Guatemala and Mexico, brings the information that Barillas is master of the situation, having put down the revolt in the city of Guatemala after three days of hard fighting. The revolt was precipitated by Montufar, a son of one of the candidates for the Presidency, who is a strong partisan of Barillas, in attempting to make a political speech on Independence Day. A mob threw him and his friends from the platform in the main plaza, pelting them with stones until they found shelter in a neighboring house. The arrival of troops from adjoining districts eventually restored Barillas to power, and the whole city is now filled with soldiers and martial law has been declared.

A private dispatch says that fully 500 lives were sacrificed in the three days' fighting, and that President Barillas is still shooting down the participants in the revolt as if they were animals. The dispatch also conveys the information that Baril as has declared himself dictator. A reign of terror prevails, the inhabitants being afraid to leave their houses.

MAGIC CITY OF A DAY.

Five Thousand People Now Located on the Chandler Town Site.

Another great Oklahoma rush is over and another city is born. Where at noon on the day of opening not a sign of human habitation existed, there is now a city of 5,000 people. Hundreds of white tents gleam among the trees, the sounds of the saw and hammer are heard, and people are buying and selling. At an early hour in the morning Governor Steele exhibited a pat of the town site of Chandler, and announced that the survey was completed, and at 11:58 the bugle would give warning, and at 12 m a volley from the soldiers' muskets in the center of the public square would be the signal to "go." The 5,000 people who had been waiting a week to get in on the town site were gleeful. By 10 o'clock horsemen and footmen stood three and five deep at all available points of the east and west borders of the town site. Few people had noticed that the sky was overcast with black clouds, and all were surprised when, with a crash of thunder, rain began to fall. For two hours it poured a perfect deluge and the water ran in streams. Every one was drenched, yet not a person moved from the line. Men in broadcloth, women in silk, cowboys, gamblers, preachers, boomers, all stood and took the rain. All were too eager for a home or a fortune to be moved by a mere drenching. The plot showed that Manual avenue, fronting on the public square and running a mile through the town and all on the smooth backbone of the town site, would be the main business street. For it everybody was headed.

The thick woods did not hinder the horsemen, who, as the signal was given, dashed at breakneck speed for the best lot they could get. Jumping from their horses they would jam a stake into the ground and yell, "This is my lot," while horses ran loose pell mell everywhere. The footmen, however, in many instances got the best lots, as the horses could not be stopped under fifty feet. Many men were knocked from their horses by tree limbs, while many horses and men fell flat in the rush, yet there was but one serious accident. Miss Nannette Daisy Eu and, of Sueve berg, was on a fast horse and ascending a rocky cliff, the horse fell and threw her against a bowlder. Her forehead got an awful blow and her left leg was fractured. She was unconscious for three hours. Immediately upon regaining consciousness she declared: "The lot where I fell is all mine." Selling fast, at once the scramble began. Many lots had from two to three claimants, each contending that he was there first. One contestant would buy out another, while those who "got left" at once wanted to buy. One corner lot sold for $600 and a good many went at from $25 to $400.

The Danger of Drifting at Sea.

On the 4th of May all but two of the fleet were again under way, if a drift seaward with not air enough to prevent a ship's canvas from hanging idly against her masts can be so called. And drift, drift, drift it was, for days and days, the coast of Chili lying in full view to the northward and eastward, and the ship rolling helplessly from side to side in the long, heavy swells of the glassy ocean. "They that go down to the sea" in steamships, in these days of ocean steam-navigation, do not realize the luxury of a storm at sea as compared with the helplessness of a sailing ship in a dead calm, when every roll threatens to jerk the spars out of her and leave her a helpless wreck.

Two days out from Valparaiso we had a strange experience. The ships Montreal and Edward Everett drifted into uncomfortable proximity, each moment visibly lessening the distance by which they were separated and increasing the prospect that the vessels would grind each other to splinters. A collision seemed inevitable, and men stood facing each other on the decks with pale faces and a common expression of infant helplessness. And all the while the sea was glassy, the sky placid, and the atmosphere beaming with serenity. As they approached to within half a ship's length, the Everett, as though impelled by a mysterious power, seemed to forge ahead slowly, while the bow of the Montreal swung as slowly to the starboard, until, with her jib-boom fairly over our port quarter and for a moment foul with our spanker gaff, she swung clear, and the two ships drifted apart and out of danger to either. It was a hairbreath escape.—Century.

Going to Church Brings Luck.

"I have known commercial travelers," says a hotel clerk, "to stay out until the early hours of Sunday morning, and yet they would get up and go to church Sunday no matter how severe the weather was. They said they were not particularly religious, but that they made it an invariable rule to go to church on Sunday or they would have no succes during the week. I remember a case of a young fellow who came in from the train late one Saturday afternoon. 'I never had a worse week in my life,' he said. 'And the reason is I neglected to go to church last Sunday, as is my usual custom.' He went out that night and did not come in until 4 o'clock in the morning, but he insisted on being called at 9 o'clock, and though it was raining pitchforks went to church after a hearty breakfast. Well, he afterward declared that he had good luck all that week."

Delight Followed by Torment.

What man or woman will deny that a good dinner is a present delight. Equally undeniable is it that when a well-cooked meal is succeeded by a fit of indigestion, rapture is converted into torture. Don't charge your dyspepsia to your dinner. No, my dear sir, your gastric department was out of order, to begin with. Had you regulated it with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the cargo that you took on board would have been comfortably stowed away without the slightest inconvenience. This incomparable stomachic entirely reforms faulty digestion, and regulates, besides, the liver and the bowels, which must act harmoniously with the digestive organ, or all three fall out of gear. Take the Bitters for kidney and rheumatic complaints, and in all cases of malaria. As a tonic, appetizer and promoter of convalescence it has no peer.

Mark Twain's Wedding Gift.

All travelers on the continent will remember the high price of wood, and the expensive luxury of a constant fire. One gentleman, who was spending some weeks in a German city, found that buying large wooden dolls, which were plentiful in the shops, gave him a better fire, since the wood was well seasoned, and at less cost than buying bundles of wood at the hotel. He aroused much curiosity, as, day after day, a large basket of dolls was sent from one or another shop to his room, until it was discovered that he burned them for firewood.

While Mark Twain was in Paris one of his friends was married there, and with his usual humor he bought a basket of wood, tied it fancifully with bright ribbons, and sent it to his friend, with his card, upon which was written, "The most expensive present I could find," which, as one can readily imagine, afforded great amusement.

One of the greatest obstacles to the settlement of vast regions in Africa has been the tsetse fly. Although harmless to man, all civilized animals die from its bite in two or three days. "German Syrup"

The majority of well-read physicians now believe that Consumption is a germ disease. In other words, instead of being in the constitution itself it is caused by innumerable small creatures living in the lungs having no business there and eating them away as caterpillars do the leaves of trees.

A Germ Disease.

The phlegm that is coughed up is those parts of the lungs which have been gnawed off and destroyed. These little bacilli, as the germs are called, are too small to be seen with the naked eye, but they are very much alive just the same, and enter the body in our food, in the air we breathe, and through the pores of the skin. Thence they get into the blood and finally arrive at the lungs where they fasten and increase with frightful rapidity. Then German Syrup comes in, loosens them, kills them, expells them, heals the places they leave, and so nourish and soothe that, in a short time consumptives become germ-proof and well.
