Pleasures of Memory.

What a blessed thing is memory! How it brings up the pleasures of the past, and hides its unpleasantnesses! You recall your childhood days, do you not, and wish they would return? You remember the pleasant associations, while the unpleasant ones are forgotten. Perhaps to your mind comes the face of some friend. It was once a pale, sad face. It showed marks of pain, lines of care. It seemed to be looking into the hereafter, the unknown future. And then you recalled how it brightened, how it recovered its rosy hue, how it became a picture of happiness and joy. Do you remember these things? Many people do, and gladly tell how the health returned, how happiness came back, how the world seemed bright. They tell how they were once weak, nerveless, perhaps in pain, certainly unhappy. They tell of sleepless nights, restless days, untouched food, unstrung nerves. And then they tell how they became happy, healthy and strong once more. You have heard it often in the past, have you not? You have heard people describe how they were cured and kept in health. You certainly can remember what it is that has so helped people in America. If not, listen to what Mrs. Annie Jenness Miller, who is known universally as the great dress reformer, says: "Six years ago, when suffering from mental care and overwork, I received the most pronounced benefit from the use of that great medicine, Warner's Safe Cure." Ah, now you remember. Now you recall how many people you have heard say this same thing. Now you recollect how much you have heard of this great Cure. Now you are ready to admit that memory is usually pleasing, that the highest pleasure comes from perfect health, and that this great remedy has done more to produce and prolong health than any other discovery ever known in the entire history of the whole world.

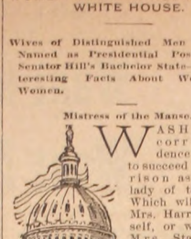
WHO WILL BE CHOSEN?

WOMEN WHO MAY RULE AT THE WHITE HOUSE.

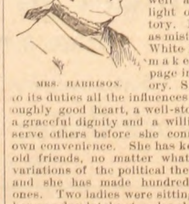
Wives of Distinguished Men Who Are Named as Presidential Possibilities—Senator Hill's Bachelor State—Some Interesting Facts About Well-Known Women.

Mistress of the Manse.



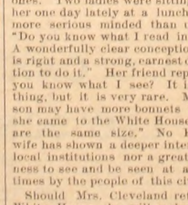
WASHINGTON correspondence: Who is to succeed Mrs. Harrison as the first lady of the land? Which will it be—Mrs. Harrison herself, or will it be Mrs. Stanford, or Mrs. Cullom, or Mrs. Rusk, or Mrs. Elkins, or Mrs. Alger, or Mrs. Robert T. Lincoln, or Mrs. John Sherman, or Mrs. McKinley, or will it be Mrs. Cleveland, or Mrs. Gorman, or Mrs. Palmer, or Mrs. Whitney, or Mrs. Carlisle, or Miss Boies, in case our national politics take a somersault, as some think they will. If not any of these women, will it be the wife of the dark horse, or will that sable-hued animal have a wife, or not having a wife, will he want to wed? Anybody with a correct solution to this puzzle will supply a great public demand by stating it. The only prominent bachelor in the field is United States Senator David B. Hill. Just because he is in that lamentable condition his case can be disposed of first. If Mr. Hill comes to the White House we are going through the same delightful experience that preceded Mr. Cleveland's wedding day. It will not make the slightest difference whether or not Mr. Hill exhibits the faintest desire for feminine company, he will be the daily object of suspicion, and of course, he will do just as the other gentleman from New York did, and in due season take to himself a wife. That point settled, will the object of his affections be young or old? Well, he need not leave Washington to make an excellent choice and one that would do his own taste and the good repute of the nation infinite credit. If it is to be President Hill what a quantity of feminine emotions will be squandered in the direction of the Executive Mansion. So far, however, if Senator Hill has any weakness or any sentimental regard for the society of womankind he has kept it locked up in his innermost soul since he came here to live. Now for the ladies named and a good many others who may feel that they might have been mentioned with equal propriety. For verily and indeed the writer of this may see in the light of subsequent events cause to gnash her teeth and muss her front hair with consuming rage that she did not have sense enough to do so. Some of these ladies are as actively in the race as their husbands, and a few make no secret of their ambitions and hopes in that direction, for, think they, nobody is as well posted as their wives on the qualifications these gentlemen possess for the best gifts the people can shower upon its idol. The most of these ladies, however, keep securely locked up in their own minds any rosy visions in which they may indulge on the quiet, and no amount of adroit questioning could tempt them to make the slightest comment on the political situation so far as their own aspirations are concerned. In a city and at a time like this, when the political stockpot has been put on for a long boil, it requires a pretty well-guarded tongue to keep from airing one's knowledge of human nature in that look so innocent on the face. For the social world the politics of a president does not spoil the flavor of his dinner parties, and, sad enough as it may sound to the serious observer of current events, the dinners and dances of an administration are as likely to live as long in history as its foreign treaties.

Mrs. Harrison and Mrs. Cleveland are the only ones able to view the situation from the mount of experience. Mrs. Harrison has known also the hard work while the struggle is pending, as well as the delight of the victory. Her career as mistress of the White House will make a bright page in history. She brought to its duties all the influences of a thoroughly good heart, a well-stored mind, a graceful dignity and a willingness to serve others before she consulted her own convenience. She has kept all her old friends, no matter what were the variations of the political thermometer, and she has made hundreds of new ones. Two ladies were sitting opposite her one day lately at a luncheon. One more serious minded than usual said: "Do you know what I read in that face? A wonderfully clear conception of what is right and a strong, earnest determination to do it." Her friend replied: "Do you know what I see? It is a simple thing, but it is very rare. Mrs. Harrison may have more bonnets than when she came to the White House, but they are the same size." No President's wife has shown a deeper interest in our local institutions nor a greater willingness to see and be seen at any and all times by the people of this city.



MRS. HARRISON.

Should Mrs. Cleveland return to the White House she will probably look at things in a much different light from what she did when she came there to be married in June, 1886, or when she left there in March, 1889, to return to private life. There certainly was a queen who created any more popular enthusiasm at every public appearance and of whose movements the most trifling details were read with more avidity, in the height of national interest in himself Mr. Cleveland took to himself a wife. All the world loves a lover and his bride, and if the eagle eyes of the feminine journalistic fraternity of this city let any little picture of the details of their daily life pass by without a pleasantly worded paragraph it was only because they forgot it. Sometimes the gallant sex took a hand in writing up the Cleveland home life. The history of that period establishes the fact that these domestic sketches were not as acceptable reading for Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland as the uniformly kind and well put things which day after day were evolved from the pens with a woman's hand manipulating them and fairly throbbing at the same time with nervous anxiety to get the results into print. Mrs. Cleveland many times expressed her appreciation of these attentions, and has often referred to it since, showing conclusively that Indian and spanish influences temporarily resident in the White House are pretty steady readers of all newspaper matter in which their names appear.



MRS. CLEVELAND.

Mrs. Stanford is one of the busiest women in America. She has her homes, her charities, her every-day interest in all the work of the university erected in memory of her son, and still finds time to entertain elegantly in her home here and to pay hundreds of visits every season. At home in California she has all the same duties to perform, with the additional obligations that come of closer ties. Mrs. Stanford's mail is as large and oftentimes larger than that of a public official. Her well-known charities are, of course, one reason to make the burden of her correspondence so heavy.

The wildest flights of fancy seem to fail one in trying to imagine what White House life would be if Mrs. Whitney was first lady of the land. She made a niche for herself in the social history of the Cleveland administration, and it is extremely doubtful if she will ever have to be pushed to the wall for anybody else. She entertained like a princess, and Washing on never before or since saw her equal.

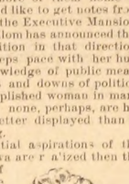
The wife of the Senator from Illinois, Mrs. Palmer, is a delightfully cheery little lady, who has made many friends during her brief residence here. She is 35 years the junior of her husband. She was a widow before she married Senator Palmer. She has six grown-up and married stepchildren and the grandchildren in the family are very numerous. Mrs. Palmer has found much to entertain her here the past winter and has mingled considerably in social life.

MRS. PALMER.

Mrs. McKinley is not generally known in Washington because her delicate health rarely allowed her to take part in any social affairs.

Mrs. Cullom is one of the most agreeable hostesses in the Senatorial circle, and has a wide circle of admirers in this city and many more of them home in Illinois who would like to get notes from her dated from the Executive Mansion, although Mr. Cullom has announced that he has no ambition in that direction. Mrs. Cullom keeps posted with her husband in her knowledge of public measures and the ups and downs of politics. She is an accomplished woman in many respects, but in none, perhaps, are her characteristics better displayed than in her housekeeping.

If the pres dential aspirations of the Governor of Iowa are r alized then the future mistress of the White House will be Miss Boies, his daughter. She is 26 years old and a good specimen of a progressive Western woman. She is good-looking also and need not have been Miss Boies so long if she were no so minded. She has a great deal of tact, considerable knowledge of political affairs, no fads or crazes, but plenty of general, all-around culture. She is devoted to church work; believes in temperance and prohibition for those who want it. Her Christian name is Jessica.



MISS BOIES.

Mrs. Elkins would make a quite ely first lady of the land. She is probably the youngest of any in the list, and has just the perfect health, happy disposition and social t stes that would fit her for this high honor. Nature has been kind to her in many ways. She is endowed with good looks, good temper and a good heart.

There are shoals of people right around here who would like to see Mrs. Carlisle mistress of the White House, and who also believe that if she settled her mind right down to securing the Presidency for her husband that victory would be theirs. The way they argue is that she never has failed in any contest in which she was interested heart and soul. She has always accompanied her husband on his political campaigns, and if there were any changes in the current she was just as quick to see them as he was. There never was a woman more devoted to her husband's constituents and as ready to lay aside all her pleasures to entertain them during their visits to the capital.

MISS RUSK.

If it's going to be President Rusk everybody else as well as the farmers can congratulate themselves in the personnel of his family group. Mrs. and Miss Rusk would be charming hostesses in the White House. The Rusk house is a pleasant place to visit and each member of the family contributes alike to make it so. Mrs. Rusk is a thorough housekeeper. Her tastes are quiet and domestic, but she is a pleasant woman to meet in society, and certainly none of the Cabinet ladies have acquitted themselves better of their social obligations than she has. Miss Rusk inherits all the charm of her parent's entire naturalness, and has impressed herself upon every one as one of the few girls that no amount of flattery could spoil. In every way she is her mother's right hand.

Mrs. Sherman is known the length and breadth of the land, and in this city her many years in official life has made the home of Senator and Mrs. Sherman like that of a permanent resident. No one better understands the demands of society and few are better able to acquit themselves of all its manifold obligations. Therefore many know her intimately, and think it the highest privilege of their lives to be able to say so. Few women are better acquainted with national events than she is, and fewer still whose ripened judgment would carry the same weight on almost any topic of general interest. In manner she is kind-hearted but quiet, and perhaps a little reserved, though always a fluent talker and a charming companion with those she knows well.

HE conquers twice, who upon victory overcomes himself.

The Collapse of a Rotten Tenement.

With crumbling foundation and shaky, bulging walls, is not more certainly to be looked for than the sudden giving way of a constitution sapped of its work, and its consequent reparative action upon the exhausted tissues and impoverished circulation. No preparative for the undergoing, without injury, of an unusual amount of bodily or mental work, no means of averting malarial infection or disorders born of bad diet and impure water equals this superlatively beneficent invigorant. Take it for dyspepsia, constipation, biliousness, rheumatism, kidney trouble, la grippe.

The "Jack" Rose.

The French General Jacqueminot was born in West India, and had a fiery temper. He had one daughter who bore the pretty name of Marguerite. An old nurse had always taken care of her. She grew very lovely, and as good as beautiful, and the son of a neighbor gave her an honored and unimpassioned love, which was returned with unquestioning faith. One day the fierce officer returned home unexpectedly and inquired for Marguerite. The nurse, fearing his anger, denied knowledge of her whereabouts. The angry parent seized a small sword and ran into the garden where the two lovers sat side by side.

His sweet daughter, filled with alarm, threw herself instinctively before her lover. The General and young Hubert crossed deadly swords, and the young lover fell dead at their feet. Marguerite also died with the end of the summer. From letters the flowers found how true was the affection that awaited his return and sanction, and his whole nature was softened by remorse.

Against the garden terrace had twined a pale, pink rose. The lovers had sat there, and the general ordered it cut to the ground. In the spring the shoots came up again, not pink, but bearing one single, perfect velvet red rose, full of passionate beauty. When called by the gardener to view the marvel, the old stricken father moaned and wept.

"Shall I sever it, my master?" asked the old servant, ready to spare him grief.

"No," was the answer, "God sent the rose."

So the rose was named after him who spared it.

"C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.:
Gentlemen: When I was 14 years of age I was confined to my bed for several months by an attack of rheumatism, and when I had partially recovered I did not have the use of my le s, so that I had to go on crutches. About a year later Scrofula in the form of
