

The 70 ton traveling derrick, the largest known to mechanical engineers, has just been raised to place in position the steel roof of "The MacKaye Spectatorium" at the World's Fair in Chicago. It did not need an experiment to prove that the ordinary derrick was much too light and much too small to be used efficaciously in throwing into position the 2,300,000 pounds of steel truss work which is to be used in the roof of this building. This enormous derrick stands 180 feet high and in the raising of it there was great difficulty. Four futile attempts were made, each time the tackle used breaking under the enormous strain and it was only on the fifth trial that this feat, one of the most extraordinary ever known, was successfully accomplished.

Cheap.
