A Ruinous Loss.

Why is it that people in general are so prone to disregard loss of strength, clearly perceptible in bodily shrinkage, failure of appetite, broken rest? Incomprehensible but true. Sheer carelessness, an overweening confidence in the power of nature to recuperate—these are suggestible reasons. One of the most observable signals of danger thrown by distressed nature is waning strength. An efficient tonic is the best safeguard against impending peril. Among the invigorants which modern science has developed and experience approved is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. And it occupies the first place. Digestion, renewed by this genial stomachic, compensates for a drain of vital force, and a regular action of the bowels and tranquil condition of the nerves, both insured by its use, co-operate in the complete restoration of vigor. The Bitters remedies liver and kidney trouble and malaria.

Well Answered

A little boy and a little girl were left at the table after their elders had departed. The boy took up a piece of pie in his fingers, and began to eat it.

"Tut! tut!" said his sister. "Better eat with your fork—not with your fingers."

"Well," said the boy, his mouth full, "fingers were made before knives and forks!"

"Maybe," said the girl, "but I guess yours weren't!"

OVER SEVENTY DEAD.

TERRIBLE RESULT OF THE IOWA CYCLONE.

Greatest Severity Felt at Pomeroy, Where the Cyclone Raged for Only One Minute but Left Fifty Dead and One Hundred Injured in Its Wake.

Wrought Awful Havoc.

More complete details from the cyclone-swept section of Northwestern Iowa do not diminish its horrors. The latest reports give the number of dead at seventy-four, and it is said at least five more will die, while the injured number considerably over one hundred. A conservative estimate places the whole number that were either killed or injured by the tornado at 250. At Pomeroy alone over fifty are dead. Five blocks of residences were completely swept away, not more than kindling wood being left of them.

The disaster is the most dire one that has occurred in Iowa since the Grinnell cyclone. The loss of life at Pomeroy is not so great as at Grinnell, but the destruction of property will be more complete. At 6 o'clock Thursday evening a thousand happy people sat down to their ten-tables chatting cheerily, unconscious of impending danger. Friday morning more than half of them were wandering about homeless and half crazed, depending on charity for food and drink, while strangers were winding the grave-clothes around their dead. Every house left standing was a hospital. Every citizen of Pomeroy mourns the loss of a relative or friend. Two hundred families are homeless, many having lost all they owned. Hundreds of people poured in on every train to view the ruins, and to every one of them the completeness of the havoc wrought by the tornado was painfully apparent. Sixty-five acres of debris is what is left of Pomeroy now. Imagine a gigantic pile of lumber scattered in every direction over a broad prairie and you have a good picture of this wrecked Iowa city. Nothing but the occasional shattered remains of a wall or the half-destroyed gable of a dwelling rise above the level of the ground. The numerous trees that surrounded the town have been swept away so completely that it would be difficult to believe that one ever grew there. One hundred and twenty-five residences, most a story-and-a-half or two-story frame; seven churches, all frame; one brick and a half-dozen frame business buildings constitute the total of buildings that were wrecked. Of course, the loss on these is total. All the other business houses, probably fifty, were more or less damaged. Those who are competent to judge say the loss in the city will not be less than a quarter of a million.

All in a Minute.

The storm did its terrible work in one minute's time. Just before dark great banks of black clouds massed in the southwest and another in the west. About 7 o'clock the two threatening piles moved toward one another and then joined. The clouds took on a green tint, which was pierced with the sun's rays for a moment. Then darkness set in rapidly. The elements seemed to form about the combined clouds, though scarcely a breeze stirred the tree-tops in the streets of Pomeroy. Those who were watching the phenomena say that a column of smoke like a cloud dropped to the ground and gathered in strength as it advanced toward the town. They recognized it as a cyclone and gave the alarm. Many sought shelter in cellars and others mounted horses to flee from the path of the coming destruction. There was a dash of hail, a blinding flash of lightning and deafening peal of thunder. Men and women ran wildly about the streets shouting and gesticulating. The cyclone struck the town at the southwest among the scattering houses in the outskirts. Roofs and shingles and sides of buildings were wrenched loose and were thrown to one side. On to the more densely populated district the monster of destruction swept, leveling all before it and leaving in its wake a cloud of splinters and wrecked homes, death and demoralization. The people were panic stricken and fled here and there amid the flying timbers until stricken down to the earth, mangled, torn, and dead. While the tornado lasted it was pitch dark, except for the vivid flashes of lightning which lit the weird and awful scene. The rain came down in torrents, the roar of the thunder and the storm was deafening. The air was full of sticks, stones, mud, horses, cattle, pigs, chickens, houses, machinery, bricks, human beings, and everything that was unable to resist the force of the terrible tempest. It was all over in a few seconds. Oh, what a piteous spectacle greeted the eyes of the agonized survivors! Dead people were on every side. Husband and wife lay on the ground, their glassy eyes turned heavenward and the bodies rent and torn in the most cruel manner. Mothers and their little babies were found stark dead, with their brains oozing out of their crushed skulls and their life blood soaking the sod beneath them. Rescuing parties at once set out, and the dead and wounded were brought in as fast as men could work. The telegraph and telephone lines were blown down, and Ed Masterson set out on a horse to Manson for help. He succeeded in flagging Vice President Harahan's special train, which flew back to Manson, and help from all the towns along the line was soon on hand. Fifteen surgeons were soon caring for the wounded. The Good Templars' Hall was turned into a hospital, and the old postoffice building did duty as a morgue. The shrieks of the wounded and the groans of the dying were mingled with the agonizing moans of those so suddenly bereft of their dear ones. It was a sight that beggars description.

Sweep of the Storm.

As shown by the accompanying map, the tornado started a short distance west of Cherokee and followed closely the Illinois Central Railroad, cutting a swath from one-quarter to one-half mile wide and completely demolishing everything in its path for a distance of sixty miles. All along this strip, in addition to the devastation wrought at Pomeroy, Fonda, Storm Lake, and other towns in its path, are wrecked homes and ruined farms. The actual loss of life in the path of the storm through the country cannot yet be accurately stated, but it is known to be great, and the damage to property is tremendous. Thousands of acres of corn alone have been destroyed. In many huge fields of corn nothing is left but the roots, and in some instances they have been torn out. It is difficult to estimate the loss, but it will reach far up in the thousands. Not a barn, or a house, or shed, or fence, or tree in the path of the storm stands. A swath was mowed through the biggest part of the woods. Huge trees were torn out by their roots and others equally as large were broken off at the place where their circumference was largest. Ten farm-houses and all their barns and outhouses between Pomeroy and Fonda have been wrecked. Only splinters of the largest buildings remain.

Gov. Boies Appeals for Help.

Gov. Boies was telegraphed as to the scope of the disaster and appealed to for aid. Whereupon the Governor immediately took the train for Pomeroy. On arriving there and looking over the desolate waste, he issued the following proclamation:

To the People of Iowa:

From a personal examination of the ruin wrought by the storm of last evening I find that forty-two are already dead and upward of 100 are seriously injured in this town, which had a population of 1,500 souls. The great bulk of the residence portion of the town is completely destroyed and hundreds of families are homeless and destitute. In at least one town west of here eight or ten are said to have been killed and many injured. The necessity for aid is imperative. The good people in towns adjacent to Pomeroy have supplied immediate wants for board and clothing, but it is impossible for them to supply all that will be needed in the future. Money, however, is the great necessity of the hour. We must not only help these people to live, but we must aid them to rebuild their destroyed homes. Permit me to recommend that in every city and town of the State immediate steps be instituted by the Mayors and municipal officers to organize relief committees and systematically proceed to collect and forward aid. This may be directed to the "Relief Committee of Pomeroy, Iowa," which will be organized during the day, and will consist of thoroughly responsible persons of this and other towns; so that aid will be surely and equitably distributed to all who are in want. Generous Iowa, it is no exaggeration for me to say that no more deserving appeal was ever made to you for aid. Be sure that you are both prompt and liberal.

HORACE BOIES,
Governor of Iowa.

Dangerous Doll.

The little province of Alsace has had a hard time, in many respects, since it was conquered by the Germans. Every possible precaution is taken to guard against any demonstration of the French national spirit, and though the children are allowed to learn the language of their ancestors, they are not allowed to be taught it by French governesses. The following two stories show the extent to which the government formerly carried its practice of watching the people:

A few years ago a little girl was seen playing with a doll, which was dressed in red, white and blue. The suspicions of the official were aroused, for it certainly was dreadful to see the power of the German Empire so boldly threatened. The child was tracked to its home, and there the officer found that the doll was a present.

He went immediately to the lady who had given it to the child, and obtained the address of the store where the dangerous plaything had been bought. It was a modest little place, but the officer found it at last, and then discovered that the doll had been made and dressed in Leipzig! This was a surprise, but the matter did not end here, for the manufacturer in Leipzig was officially requested not to send any more red, white and blue dolls to Alsace.

The other story may not carry with it full conviction of its truth, but it is too good not to be told.

It is said that two Germans were walking one cold day on the banks of a large pond, when one of them fell in. He could not swim, and screamed for aid. The other, who was an officer, did not feel inclined to take so cold a plunge, and calmly watched the struggles of the sinking man. All at once the man in the water began to sing a stanza of the Marseillaise, and the officer jumped in forthwith, for his strict orders were to arrest any person whom he heard singing that famous song. The unfortunate citizen was imprisoned for eight months, but that was better than drowning.

Royal Appointments.

We often lament the character of appointments to office under party rule, which sometimes gives the "spoils" to the victor, but they have never been as conspicuously unfit, probably, as the appointments made by royal personages in the past.

This old fashion of favoritism is well satirized in a story told of M. Bignon, a person of very little learning, who was made royal librarian by King Louis XV. of France.

When the news of this appointment was brought by Bignon to his uncle, M. d'Argenson, the uncle exclaimed:

"Good, nephew! Now you have an admirable opportunity to learn to read!"

Too Much Thrashing.

Country boys, who are inclined to think that life in cities is easy and comfortable compared with their daily toil in the country, are apt to find themselves mistaken when they come to town and subject themselves to the high-pressure system of business establishments. An amusing example of this sort is related by a country exchange.

A farmer's boy went to the city, finding the work at home rather tiresome, and obtained a situation in a large "family supply" store, where a "rushing business" was carried on. He "took hold" very well, and his employers liked him. They were surprised, however, when he came to them, before he had been two months in the store, and said:

"Well, Mr. A——, I guess I'll have to get through here next Saturday night."

"Get through?" said his employer. "Why, what's gone wrong?"

"Oh, nothing particular."

"Aren't you treated well?"

"First rate; but I'll tell you just how it strikes me. Up on the farm we used to have the thrashing-machine come once a year; and then we thrashed for three days, and you'd better believe we worked hard; but I tell you what—I've been here now seven weeks, and you've thrashed every day! I guess I've got enough of it."

He went back to the farm, convinced that a farmer's life has its compensations.

Sensation of Dying from Cold.

It is certainly painful and disagreeable to be sick, but it is an intense satisfaction to know that the final stages of death are accompanied by no pain whatever, only so far as regrets may be experienced. Even the various stages of freezing to death do not seem to cause any very uncomfortable sensations. The pleasures of freezing are set forth by a Canadian physician, who at one time enjoyed them. His tongue and then his arms became stiff, sharp chills ran down his back, and finally it seemed as though his whole body had congealed, causing an almost entire cessation of the heart's action. This condition of suffering speedily gave place to a grateful warmth, which seemed to suffuse the system and cause an exhilarating glow. He was driving, and by this time had reached a house, but he went on, thinking that nothing was now to be feared. The sleigh appeared to him to glide through the air with great swiftness, and the horses seemed to fly like birds. A sense of exultation filled him, and he urged the beasts to greater speed. The woods on each side of the road were passed so quickly that they seemed indistinguishable black lines. Then the jingle of bells sounded further and further away, until they passed out of hearing in the distance. He fell gradually into a delicious slumber, which came near being the sleep of death.
