The reports which have been circulated in other towns in regard to the lawless condition of our village, would almost justify strangers in thinking that life or property were not safe here, but we are glad to state that such a state of affairs does not exist within our borders. There is not a more orderly lot of strikers anywhere, and no damage has been done here whatever.

Harris, Miss Emmett; Ramsay school, Miss Sarah Jones, Miss Taylor, Miss Green; Central City, Miss Grace Bates, Miss Lilla Dobbis. On Tuesday evening of this week Emington was visited by a disastrous fire. The fire was seen by Geo. Dudding about 11 o'clock at night, in the rear of Newhoff's grocery store. The grocery store and furniture store were entirely consumed. The fire started several times on the north side of the street. Mr. Wickoff's drug store was in serious danger, as was also Vickerson's blacksmith shop, Clover & Drew's warehouse, and Seelby & Brady's store. The vigorous work of the citizens alone saved the town. Had there been a strong wind nothing could have saved the village. The origin of the fire is unknown. This is a vigorous suggestion that we ought to have better fire protection. Why not have a tank and hydrants?

The 4th of July celebration at Emington was a grand success. The procession started from the main street at 10:30. Mr. Isaac Hodgson was the marshal of the day. The Emington cornet band led, followed by the Junior Christian Endeavor, I. O. G. T. lodge, I. O. M. A. lodge and "Coxey's Army" (a most ridiculous crowd of commonwealers). The programme at the grove at 11 o'clock was as follows: Music by the band; prayer, Rev. Cutler; "The Star Spangled Banner," by the Crystal Fountain quartette; reading of the "Declaration of Independence" by Mrs. Harry Drew; song, "Unfold the Glorious Banner," by the I. O. G. T. lodge chorus; recitation, "1776," by Miss Stella Parker; song, "We are Marching," by the Junior Christian Endeavor; original poem by Miss Hunt; Oration by Rev. W. A. Cutler, who filled the place of Mr. Norton, of Pontiac; song, "Our Childhood's Home," by the Crystal Fountain quartette; music

An English View of U.
Although Englishmen are taunted by being called a race of shopkeepers, their cousins in America deserve the term in a far greater degree, says an English writer. The race for wealth, the creation of wealth, the possession of wealth, has been until quite recently the sole object of the American's existence. Success in business is the standard still whereby the American is judged, and it is the aim of the American tradesman to make money and establish his children and himself as gentlemen and ladies at the fashionable resort, rather than to do as his English cousins would do, attend to the civic honors of his native town.

A Plucky Alaska Woman.

THE BLACK DEATH.

Awful Ravages of the Scourge in Other Countries.
The black death made its first appearance in Europe in 1347. It was recorded at Constantinople, when from 5,000 to 10,000 deaths are said to have occurred daily at Constantinople. During the middle ages it swept across the continent of Europe, Africa and Europe, the 14th century being especially marred by its fatal prevalence. In 1331 one-fourth of the population of China was killed by the pestilence. Thence it spread to the western countries of Asia, to Arabia, Syria, Egypt, and the eastern and southern countries of Europe.

Of the frightful devastation wrought by it in England in 1347-1350, Mr. Longman, in his "Life and Times of Edward III," gives a vivid picture. More than one-half, he estimates, of the population of England and Wales, then amounting to between 3,000,000 and 4,000,000, died. The ravage was several times prolonged on account of the great increase of the pestilence, and on June 18, 1350, a proclamation regulating wages was issued "to ease a great part of our people in dearth with respect to the wages of labor." The deaths of Yorkshire more than half of the priests died, while in the diocese of Norwich 1,000 out of 1,500 parish were left without incumbents. In Bristol the living could hardly bury the dead and the grass it is said, grew several inches high in High Street and Broad street.

The black death appeared last in England in 1665, when 100,000 persons within the bills of mortality perished. Defies a count of its horrors, as witnessed in London, is well known; but an even more realistic description of its ravages is that drawn by Dr. Nathaniel Hodges, a London physician, who bravely remained at his post throughout the awful visitation, ministering to the stricken inhabitants of the metropolis, and who lived to be confined for debt in Ludgate Prison, where he died in 1688.

TIGERS AND THEIR PREY.

Some Information as to How They Make Their Attacks.
A correspondent who has seen a great deal of forest life in India writes on the subject of how tigers secure their prey. As a general rule, he is inclined to deny the truth of the commonly accepted story that the tiger, after lurking in ambush, springs on to the unsuspecting victim, and, tearing savagely at his throat, eagerly drinks his blood. This method of attack may sometimes be adopted, but it is rare more often the exception than the rule.

In approaching his prey the tiger makes the best possible use of cover, but when further concealment is impossible he will course a deer or other susceptible animal with extraordinary speed. A sudden dash of 200 yards in the open is nothing uncommon, and the writer mentions the case of one tiger which used to catch hogs or deer almost daily on a perfectly open and burned-up plain.

As for the most part, he is dispatched with a blow of the paw; but in the case of the more bulky, the explosive tiger, leaping on the back of his victim, grips the neck in front of the withers with his jaws, one forepaw fastens on the mane of the animal and the other fully extended under the throat. Should he be unable to crush the spine with his jaws, he will then jerk the head back violently and thereby break the neck. In removing his prey the tiger frequently displays his almost phenomenal strength and activity. In one case cited, a young tiger leaped up a perpendicular rock, some six feet high, with a man weighing nearly eleven stones in his jaws, and on another occasion a male tiger dragged an exceptional large buffalo up a bank at least ten feet high.

FIGHTING A TARANTULA.

It Is Well to Give the Venomous Creations a Wide Berth.
"Of all the venomous-looking creatures in the world I think a full-grown tarantula is the most-looked-up," said a native of Texas, recently, "and if you ever encounter one give him a wide berth unless you are sure you can kill it. When attacked they will fight desperately and never give up until crushed out of existence. I had an experience with one a few years ago, the thought of which still makes the cold chills run down my back. I had been working in my garden one afternoon and on entering the house I threw myself down on the bed to take a nap. I was awakened by feeling a hairy object brushing against my hand, and on opening my eyes was horrified to see an immense tarantula slowly crawling up the leg of my pantaloons. I grabbed a big potato from that day my pillow and knocked him on the floor and you ought to have seen that fellow squirm. He never made the least attempt to get out of the way, but with his hairy body and his ugly body-handling legs he remained where I had him until he was dead. He was a club wif and his existence cost me a night's sleep."

Longest Speech on Record.

The honor of having made the longest continuous speech in the Legislature of British Columbia, in that body there is no such thing as "Senatorial courtesy," so that a speaker cannot get a few minutes respite for refreshments as he generally can in the Senate of this country. The record breaker, who is of French descent, is an old college athlete, and on one occasion last season he was put up by the opposition to talk a bill to the Legislature. He saw through the device, and one day put every syllable in the way of the speaker. He started at 10 o'clock in the morning, kept steady at his work and did not stop until 11 o'clock in the night. He was not in the best of health when he undertook the job, but he did not sit down until the next day, when the bill became dead by its own time, and he secured a rest which was well earned.
