If Asked to Designate the Best Method of Lighting a House, Your Reply of Course Would Be 'By Electric Light'

The operating companies all know that. They understand the person who would hold to the contrary is a rare bird.

One of the large facts hammered out by their experience is that if an average house is without electric light, it's because it doesn't happen to be equipped for it.

This company meets that situation by a plan of wiring houses at cost and spreading the monthly payments over a period of two years.

An important function of our house wiring department is to ascertain ways to reduce the cost of wiring. Because it's to the interest of all concerned that it be as low as possible.

We've got results from that department of costs. The expense of wiring a house has been brought down where it is low. And that statement refers to little houses as well as large ones.

The expense of wiring and the cost of the service, in fact, are each so low that it would be difficult to say just what income could not afford both or either. We don't guess at that. We dig the fact out of some thousands of customers' bills rendered monthly.

If the subject interests you—and we're very sure it will if your house is not wired—a telephone call on our office or a postal card will bring in response a representative who will estimate the cost of wiring and give you full details of the plan

Item of importance: An old house is wired just as easily as a new one. No inconvenience to the occupants.
