Electric Light as an Investment

The finest mansion that adorns the city street or the countryside if without electrical equipment would be considered as incomplete as if the plumbing were omitted.

In other words Electric Light is a necessary part of a house. Without it there's a decided difference in selling value.

The fact is so well understood, that the house built nowadays, which isn't wired, is a rarity. Sometimes there is no electric service within 20 miles, but the wiring is done nevertheless.

But the value added to a house after it's wired—the money profit—doesn't equal the other profit that follows, although the last is not expressible like the first in dollars.

It's in the comfort, convenience, cleanliness and economy of electric light

No house owner need be without electric light because the expense of wiring his place is low and we do the work at cost and spread the bill over two years in monthly payments.

An old house can be wired as easily as a new one without inconvenience to the occupants.
