Modern Means of the Present

It has always been the weakness of numerous Grandpappies to refer to the good old times. Some of them remember when the best available method of indoor lighting in parts of these woods was represented by a gourd full of grease with a wick floating in it.

Alice in Wonderland did not hear the Gump say to the Whadjumacallit: "Do you want to go back to the gourd?" But then he might have said it; he certainly would have said it if modern lighting had been the topic of conversation.

Would You Say It?

The average man would. If he did not his wife would sure, especially if she had been over her neighbor's house equipped with Electric Light.

Look at it. It's the modern Light. Just push a button and it blazes out—the purest in quality, the most healthful and adaptable and the most economical of all artificial lights, if you use it properly.

The number of houses in town is the number we want to connect on. If yours isn't wired, we'll equip it for electric light and power, and spread the bill over 24 months.
