FOUGHT FIERCELY OVER PUP

Two Small Boys and Street Cur Furnished Amusement for Brokers on Wall Street.

Two dirty, ragged little boys and a dirty, ragged white pup created a lot of fun in Wall street the other day. Just where they came from and how such an odd trio ever found its way to the heart of the New York financial district were mysteries which none cared about solving in the joy of watching their antics. The pup, it seems, was the bone of contention between the youngsters, each having a perfectly good claim to it, which he asserted with might and main. The first seen of them was when a wild-eyed little dog, with the "kids" in pursuit, came running toward Wall street from the direction of the curb market. A passing truck blocked the pup's progress, and both children fell upon it. Each sought to bear it away in a different direction, until it seemed that each would have to satisfy himself with an end of the dog. Equally matched in strength, the youngsters made no headway, so with one accord they let go of the dog and sought to rend each other. The pup took advantage of the fight to lope toward Broadway, and it was half-way there before the boys discovered its absence. Abandoning their difficulties they set out in pursuit. A large crowd followed, and when the dog was overhauled the same performance was gone through again. After this had been repeated half a dozen times, and the whole Wall street district had been covered, an officer of an animal society appeared and took the cur. The dog and the crowd thus won—but the "kids" lost.

HUMAN BEING AS A FACTORY

Writing in Atlantic Monthly, Gerald Stanley Lee Made a Remarkably Comprehensive Comparison.

A human being is a kind of factory. The engine and the works and all the various machines are kept in the basement, and he sends down orders to them from time to time, and they do the work which has been conceived up in headquarters. He expects the works down below to keep on doing these things without his taking any particular notice of them, while he occupies his mind, as the competent head of a factory should, with the things that are new and different and special, and that his mind alone can do; the things which, at least in their present initial formative or creative stage, no machines as yet have been developed to do, and which can only be worked out by the man up in the headquarters, himself, personally, by the handwork of his own thought.

The more a human being develops, the more delicate, sensitive, strong and efficient, the more spirit-informed, once for all, the machines in the basement are. As he grows, the various subconscious arrangements for discriminating, assimilating, classifying material, for pumping up power, light, and heat to headquarters, all of which can be turned on at will, grow more masterful every year. They are found all slaving away for him, dimly, down in the dark, while he sleeps. They hand him up, in his very dreams, new and strange powers to live and to know with—Gerald Stanley Lee, in the Atlantic.

Men often mistake the fear that they will be found out for conscience.

Considerate Sailor.
The paying teller of one of the Cleveland banks says that on a certain day last month a jolly tar, arm in arm with his friend John Barleycorn, came rolling up to the window.

"How's business, mate?" began the seaman, sprawling both arms on the glass ledge.

"Fair," replied the paying teller indugently. "Only fair. But we hope it will pick up before long. By the way, what can I do for you?"

"Well, you see it's like this," said the tar, pulling out a check for $30, made payable to bearer. "Here's a check as calls for a lot o' money. But I ain't goin' to be hard on you if business ain't good. No, sir! That's not my style. You just give me $10 down and send me the other $20 some time when things are looking up!"—Puck.

Thackeray's Tribute to Woman.

If a man is in grief, who cheers him? In trouble, who consoles him? In wrath, who soothes him? In joy, who makes him doubly happy? In prosperity, who rejoices? In disgrace, who backs him against the world and dresses with gentle urgents and warm politeness the rankling wounds by the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune? Who, but a woman, if you please!—William Makepeace Thackeray.

Don't Be Like That.
