Ketcham House.

There is lots of interest around town regarding what will eventually be done with the old Ketcham house, which stands in the middle of the street at the intersection of Mazon avenue and Franklin street. The people are getting sick of looking at it.

At a meeting of the Trustees held this week, the action of four members of the Board in giving Mr. Zappa a permit was confirmed, and a resolution passed that the building can be moved and is to be covered with sheet iron.

It is thought the injunction will be dissolved.

The proceedings of the Board is published in another part of this paper.

A Christmas Edition.

The following is taken from the Livingston County Democrat. Thanks, brother:

"The Dwight Star and Herald issued the best Christmas edition last week that it has been our good fortune to look over during our life-long residence here. The edition was of thirty-two pages, all home print, with a beautiful cover page, suggestions of the season. Printed on fine book paper, it is a model of the typographical art and we congratulate our friend Holbrook for his effort in turning out such a neat edition of the Star and Herald. The reading matter was carefully selected by Editor Dustin, and beside the write-ups of the different business houses, manufactories, etc., contains good reading for all and very appropriate to the Christmas season. We enjoyed the paper very much and have placed it away for future reference."

Furnaces Explode.

Too much care cannot be taken to see that the flues from all furnaces are kept clean, so that gas can escape.

Reports come from Bloomington and other places that explosions have taken place, and in one case the whole top of the furnace was blown through the first floor, and the whole inside of the house was aflame in a few minutes.

It is a good investment to have someone examine furnaces and their connections at least once every season.

DEATH OF MRS. BARRETT.

Dwight Resident Passes Away at Louisville After a Week's Severe Illness.

Mrs. Gertrude Barrett passed away at her former home in Louisville, Ky., Wednesday night of this week, the cause of her death being a severe attack of gastritis. Mrs. Barrett had been in poor health for some time and had only returned from Louisville, Ky., about six weeks ago, where she had taken treatment from her family physician for this same trouble.

About the middle of last week she was taken with a very severe attack of the disease and her family physician, Dr. Lindenburg, of Louisville, was telegraphed for and arrived the next day. He pronounced her in a very serious condition but decided the best thing to do would be to take her back to Louisville, where he could give her the best attention possible, and on Friday of last week she left for that city accompanied by the doctor, and her sister, Miss Grace Ketcham. She stood the trip pretty well considering how ill she was, but did not improve as was expected by her friends here. Wednesday evening her brother, Mr. Jas. Ketcham, of this city, received a telegram to come at once as Mrs. Barrett was very low and shortly after and before he could leave, received one saying she was dead. Mr. Ketcham left on the first train for Louisville to help his sister, Miss Grace, arrange matters for the burial which will probably take place at Louisville.

Mrs. Barrett was formerly Miss Gertrude Ketcham, and lived in Dwight all her life until her marriage to Mr. Louis Barrett a number of years ago. After her marriage she and her husband made their home in Louisville, Ky., until the latter's death some four or five years ago. Since that time she divided her time between Dwight and Louisville, and after her mother's death, two years ago this month, she lived here most of the time with her sister, Grace.

Mrs. Barrett has many friends here who regret to learn of her early demise, and who will sympathize with her brother and sister in their great loss.

The funeral is to be held today at Louisville, Ky.

A Pleasant Surprise.

Miss May Judge was pleasantly surprised at her home Friday night, by ten couples trooping in with well-filled baskets, Miss May and her brother Henry making a total of twenty-two present.

The evening was passed away in playing games, the favorite of which was "Rummy."

At twelve o'clock a delicious dinner was served, after which they were entertained with music by Stanley Klitz and Miss Ida Buehler.

The guests departed at a very late hour, leaving Miss May assured of their delightful time.
