CROP NOTES

BY ROY C. BISHOP
County Agricultural Agent

Long Point Township Takes Important Step.

The work recently undertaken by C. E. Stratton, of Long Point township, to establish a permanent township organization both for the children of public school age and for the operating farmers of the township, is the first of its kind in this county and affords a splendid suggestion for the other townships in this and other counties.

Several weeks ago, Mr. Stratton arranged with a number of the rural schools in his township to set a day for a corn contest, in which all the pupils were to engage and exhibit ten ears of corn in competition for a substantial prize which Mr. Stratton offered himself. It was arranged to have the corn judged in the different districts by the county agent, and then to exhibit the prize winning exhibits in a general township Corn Show at Long Point. All of the students were gathered around the corn judging table as the County Agent judged the corn. Each successive step in placing the corn was discussed in detail so that every student had an opportunity to become familiar with the desirable characteristics of corn, as well as those characteristics which are to be avoided.

Following the corn judging, testing the germination of corn, by the so-called Rag Doll method was discussed and demonstrated. The students were interested in testing their father's seed corn and of keeping a careful record of each individual ear tested. It was further provided for those undertaking the testing work to have kernels from the ears testing strong, those testing weak and those testing partially dead, planted in the general field in rows to themselves, and to gather and weigh in the fall and compare yields of corn developed from the ears giving these variable tests.

Following this introductory work, it was planned to hold a boys and girls acre corn growing contest for the township. A first prize of $50, or its equivalent will be offered and a substantial second prize will also be given. Each contestant will be required to do practically all the work on this acre of corn, to write a full report on just what was done in its production and to submit this report to a committee which will pass on the efficiency of the work done, the type of soil, the yield of crop, the soil management schemes employed and cultivation. It is expected that these contestants will go far above the 100 bushel mark in their corn production and will develop some very valuable facts with respect to corn production.

It is hoped that other townships in the county will develop similar organization and contests, and that not only the different school districts of the county may enter into competition for prizes in corn growing, but that the prize winners in each township may compete for a large county prize of from $300 to $500.

The township organization of farmers of which Mr. Stratton is President, is made up of the members of the Livingston County Soil and Crop Improvement Association, who reside in Long Point township. These men will have frequent business meetings this winter at which time the County Agent will discuss agricultural matters of interest, and when all the members of the organization will have an opportunity to ask questions and give reports on results of their farm operations. At the first meeting of this body, which was held in the Directors' room of the Long Point Bank, December 16th, corn improvement and care of seed corn was discussed. This scheme of holding local meetings of farmers bids fair to give some of the most satisfactory results and will probably be the most effective means of carrying the best practices of the art and science of agriculture direct to the farm operator.

Yours very truly,
ROY C. BISHOP,
Agent, U. S. Dept. of Agr.
