CONTINUED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

There is no higher ruling purpose, than to provide for the social wants of its own circle. That society, who condemn labor is not honorable, sterling worth and integrity as but a name, and flunkysim the main poke in 'their body honorable' All such people we look upon as we do shying horses, not only frightened at imaginary objects but constantly looking up some object to be frightened at and their support is not worth the trouble of trying for.

PANORAMA.

An old and earnest gentleman of Pickwickian proportions, and peculiarities showed us the city of New York on Wednesday evening, on canvas and gave us an explanatory lecture in which good sense and balderdash was curiously mixed up, We did not know which to admire most; the earnest desire of the old man to make his audience comfortable by ARRANGING them, or his continued fight with the small boys for trying to monopolize the talk rightfully belonging to his share in the show. The old gent, evidently understood human nature pretty well and he showed it, in this land of strangers, by his judicious selection of our friend High Cornell to keep his door and take in the small change, while he took charge of the audience. So much for an honest face.

'JIM' STEELE.

Our friend Steele still continues to run the M' Pherson and runs it equal to anything in the Hotel line, South-west of Chicago. Men are born to fill certain positions in life and if they happen to make a mistake, sad work is the result—INSTANCE THE EDITORS OF THE COURIER—but if they happen to strike the occupation they are best suited to, they become eminent. Mr. Steele was born a land-lord and his executive ability in that direction is undeniable; so at least say those whose good fortune it is, to 'put up' with him.

SATURDAY EVE.

One of the finest displays Dwight ever witnessed was given us by the Tanners, and Tanner ladies, last Saturday evening. The Round Grove Tanners being mounted, were honored by being made the escort of the Tanner ladies; an honor they evidently appreciated.—The whole affair was very creditable to those managing it.
