

FAREWELL TO DEMOCRACY.

Democracy farewell! Thou art "gone up." Thou art even now, traveling that invisible wire that stretches itself from the mosque of Omar to the summit of Olvit, and the Mahomed of POPULAR WILL, is even now judging you in advance. You have been weighed in the scales of common sense Democracy, and have been found wanting. Never more will the fires of your altars light up, and illumine the hearts of your disciples and followers with that enthusiasm which in days of yore, shone like the beacon light of the ancient Pharo's, to the down-trodden, of other nations. Farewell Democracy! thou noble old party farewell! Thy doom is chiseled, by the hands that fostered thee, in the solid marble of eternity and the land that knew thee once, in the days of thy sapient and intelligent rule, "will know thee no more for ever." Democracy again farewell! farewell, thou wonderful conglomerate mixture of deceit and sophistry, not more profoundly buried in its traditions of past greatness, is the land of the Labyrinth the Phoenix and the Sphynx than art thou to future generations.

We mourn for thee Democracy in thy death struggle, as mourns the foreign student, who in days past, made thy mild and simple policy the treasure-trove of his future anticipations but the spirit of modern investigation has brooded over thee, and naught but a chaos of thine ancient and time honored frame-work is left thee now. But God in his wisdom has caused light to shine out of thy darkness for the poor fettered and unlettered slave.

Once Democracy, thou wert the pride and the glory of earth, but now how changed and fallen! The land-marks of thine ancient scholarly, and and wisdom-freighted architects are lost. Thou hast thrown away the needle of thy compass, and now wander like a storm-tossed ship upon the turbid sea of uncertainty, and the voice of thy chosen pilot—even Seymour, falls idly on thine unheeding ears. Oh, Democracy! Democracy! how plundered are the tombs of thy traditions! How lost is thine ancient, phoenix-like power to renew thyself; thy memnon gone for ever, thy temples and thy Gods, crumbled into dust! Alas, alas! how hast thou been plundered of even the remnants of thy former greatness! Why hast thou Democracy allowed that cohesive bond of public plunder, that ever fettered thee with links of steel to thy followers, to be severed? The seers of thy tombs, have been born away; thine obelisks have been removed; and what remained of thy statues, altars and images, have been stolen to adorn and enrich that party platform of Republicanism. Democracy thou art gone up! Thou who hast given all things to mankind, why hast thou kept nothing for thyself, but an empty and imperishable name?

PLATO.

Our enterprising merchants on Mazon Avane, are having the street paved, for the benefit of our farmers—we would suggest that the merchants on East street would do likewise.
