you receive from them, are they lively enough even to make you tolerably so? Doubtless, no. All these together joined, could not be able to rid you of that stupid sameness of life which is so apt to oppress you; and you must have, in truth, remained the most pitiable creatures alive!

But 'tis the peculiar province of women to dissipate this moral languor, by the lively seasoning of their converse, and the charms they are capable of diffusing over gallantry. A fond folly, a flattering hope, or an ardent wish, are the only things that can awaken your attention, and give you a true sense of happiness. For surely, Gentlemen, there is a vast difference between merely possessing our good fortune and relishing the pleasure of that enjoyment.

The bare necessities of life can only make a man easy; 'tis superfluity that renders him rich, or makes him sensible he is so. It is not superior qualities alone that makes us amiable: 'tis perhaps, a fault to be master of none but what are valuable. To be well received in the world one must be agreeable, entertaining, serviceable to the pleasure of others. I promise you, that there is no succeeding in general, but particularly with women, except by these means.

The CHAMPION BLACKGUARDS of the METHODIST SOCIETY are out again this week with another PASQUINADE on the STAR. The TRUTH evidently hurts their stomachs worse than oysters hurts ours. We will notice their oyster supper next week as it deserves.
